ALFRED GILBERT'S

COMPLETE MODERN PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,

THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL.

THE FIRST STAGE.

'ELEMENTARY MUSIC,' PRICE 4*s*.

Explains the Keyboard of the Pianoforte, and the mode of performing upon it, with a Preliminary Exercise in illustration. Notation—with an exercise. The Stave—with examples. Time or Measure—with an exercise. The Scale—with a practical illustration. The use of the Pedal. Transposition. The embellishments. Marks and words relating to speed, touch, and tone.

THE SECOND STAGE.

'TECHNICAL EXERCISES for the PIANOFORTE.'

(Price 10s. complete, or in Three Separate Parts, each 4s.)

PART I.—Gives a complete explanation of Intervals and their Inversions, followed by Finger Exercises, founded upon the theory enunciated. The Exercises are given in the Key of C Major, but directions are given for their transposition. There are also special Exercises for each finger, and Exercises exhibiting the process of modulation and transposition through all the Major keys.

PART II.—Gives a complete explanation and exposition of the Scales in every key, Diatonic and Chromatic, with a page set apart to show the many different ways in which each should be practised; the variations of the Minor Scale are also exemplified.

PART III.—Gives a concise explanation of the theory and examples of the principal chords used in music: The Triad, the Dominant-seventh, the Dominant Nine-seven, the Leading and Diminished Sevenths, with their positions and inversions as well as their usual progression, an example of each chord and position of it is given, with its proper fingering; forms of arpeggio are added derived from the chords and requiring an application of the same fingering. These are given in the key of C, with urgent request that they should be transposed.

THE THIRD STAGE.

'SONATINAS, RONDOS, AIRS, and MINUETS.'

Contains in Four Series (lettered A, B, C, D) Forty-eight classic works, progressively arranged, from which suitable numbers may be selected from time to time for use with the earlier stages of the School. Many of these works are here presented for the first time in England.

PRESS NOTICES

The Quiver.

PERSUASIVE SOUND.

"The practice of sacred singing is of untold value, for even if the holy words seem just now to fall from thoughtless lips, some of them may abide in the memory and whisper in time to come their real and solemn meaning. Friends with musical gifts can scarcely use them better than by arranging one of the services of song now so numerous and in many cases so beautiful. A simply arranged but effective oratorio is "The Christian's Armour," by Mrs. Alexander Roberts (Hutchings and Co.) for which suitable music to the Scriptural description of Christian conflict has been supplied by Mr. Roeckel. Young and old will alike be found ready to help in the performance of the melodies, and substantial additions may thus be made to the funds of Sunday-school library or temperance society, 'How can I sing the Lord's song?' perhaps some heart may ask just now, that once in more prosperous days was filled with melody."

The Scotsman.

"During the last few years there has been a marked revival, especially among British composers, of the tendency to work in the oratorio form. There is scarcely a musician of note who has not essayed his strength in this field, and several works of real excellence and artistic importance have been produced. Few among them surpass in loftiness of purpose, purity, and elevation of tone, or force of inspiration, the oratorio which Mr. Joseph L. Roeckel has produced under the title 'The Christian's Armour.' The text has been compiled and arranged by Mrs. Alexander Roberts, who has sought to bring together hymns and passages of Scripture illustrating the well-known passage in the 6th chapter of Ephesians descriptive of 'the whole armour of God.' This design she has executed with considerable skill and judgment, and Mr. Roeckel, in the musical treatment of the text, enters thoroughly into the spirit of her design. After a broad and impressive introduction, consisting of two recitatives and an instrumental movement, the various pieces in the metaphorical armour of the Christian—the girdle of Truth, the breastplate of Righteousness, the shield of Faith, the helmet of Salvation, and the sword of the Spirit—are depicted in solo and choral numbers, and the work concludes with a proclamation of the power of prayer and an exultant hymn. Mr. Roeckel's music possesses throughout a strength and devotional fervour congenial to the theme, and many of the movements have, besides, the charm of beautiful melody. Among these may be mentioned the soprano air, 'Thou art the truth;' the contralto air, 'Jesus, thy blood and righteousness;' and the leading motive of the chorus, 'How beauteous are their feet.' The choruses, almost without exception, are worked out in a manner which attests the composer's constructive ability and his contrapuntal knowledge, while the instrumentation of the oratorio, so far as it can be judged from the pianoforte score, greatly enhances its musical richness and interest. 'The Christian's Armour' may be cordially recommended to choral societies who are seeking a work of moderate dimensions, and which does not make excessive demands on solo vocalists."

The Manchester Weekly Post.

"The object of the composer is to interpret by music the well-known passage in Paul's Epistle to Ephesians (vi., 13-17), which contains a description of spiritual armour necessary for every soldier of Christ. We desire to say at once, and without reserve, that Mr. Roeckel has accomplished his purpose admirably. Twenty-four 'numbers' constitute the work, and they are, as in all similar works, recitations, solos, duets, trios, and choruses. The work is divided into main parts, which are again divided into separate descriptive sections

"Part I embraces a bass and choral recitative and an instrumental introduction, a soprano recitative, an unaccompanied quartette, a soprano air, and a chorale devoted to 'The Girdle of Truth,' which is the first piece of armour. 'The Breastplate of Righteousness,' which is the second piece, receives illustration in four numbers, a baritone recitative and tenor air, a chorus, a contralto air, and another chorus. To 'The Shoes of the Preparation of the Gospel of Peace' three numbers are given—a soprano recitative and quartette with chorus, a baritone air, and another chorus.

"Part II first illustrates 'The Shield of Faith.' This is done in five numbers, the first—an Instrumental Intermezzo—being introductory; to which follows a contralto recitative and chorus, a contralto air, a duet for soprano and tenor, and a chorus. 'The Helmet of Salvation' takes up three numbers—a tenor recitative and a trio for trebles a chorale and a tenor recitative and air. 'The Sword of the Spirit' covers three numbers—a choral recitative and chorus, a soprano air and chorus, and an unaccompanied chorus. This is the descriptive portion of the oratorio. The conclusion, which may be said to balance the Introduction, is made up of a tenor recitative and baritone air with a choral recitative between, and a final chorus. We have seen no work of this particular kind which is likely to acquire a wider popularity. It is not too simple for well organized choirs in churches, chapels, and schools, and it is sufficiently important and artistic to win their sympathy and favour. The recitatives are many, and will require careful study and performance; but few choirs of any merit will fail to provide singers equal to them. The choruses are exceptionally attractive, having a melodial quality which is not always found in choruses. They are well put together, but offer no serious difficulties, chromatic or constructive. It will be observed that the contralto plays an important part in the work—a beautiful part, we will add. This fact alone should commend it to choir masters and conductors. But every voice is well handled; and we repeat our sincere admiration of Mr. Roeckel's pictorial oratorio. Much skill has been displayed by Mrs. Alexander Roberts in providing the words. We endorse a note found on the title-page to the effect that the subject and treatment of this oratorio render it particularly suitable for church performance and services of song."

SACRED MUSIC—THE CHRISTIAN'S ARMOUR.

"The text of this work, and the arrangement of the subject are due to the careful hands of Mrs. A. Roberts, who, in her preface, thus describes the design of the work: 'No metaphor is more frequently employed to denote the believer's life than that of a warfare. Figurative language of this kind pervades the whole of Scripture.' In pursuance of this idea Mrs. Roberts divides her book into several sections—thus we have 'The Girdle of Truth,' 'The Breastplate of Righteousness,' 'The Shoes of the Preparation of the Gospel of Peace' in Part I, and 'The Shield of Faith,' 'The Helmet of Salvation,' 'The Sword of the Spirit,' and 'The Conclusion.'

"These sections are subdivided into 24 numbers, to which Mr. J. Roeckel has set music, conceived in a reverent spirit and written with the taste and judgement of an artist, and without being strikingly original or profoundly deep, it may be fairly described as pleasant and tuneful throughout and as being in keeping with the subject. Mr. Roeckel has employed the usual quartet of solo voices and chorus in about equal proportions, and to these are allotted music which will be as interesting to sing as to hear; one piece the song for soprano in the key of F, 'Thou art the Truth,' is especially to be noted for its freshness, grace, and a certain undefinable sweetness which makes it cling to the memory. The accompaniment probably arranged from the orchestral score by the composer is skilfully laid out and highly effective."

Oldham Chronicle.

"'The Christian's Armour,' is a high-class thrilling, and powerful oratorio, compiled by Mrs. Alexander Roberts, and composed by Joseph L. Roeckel. Mr. [illegible] work with rare judgement, taste, skill; which we find familiar words imparts to [illegible] and beauty. Never was the practised pen [illegible] to greater advantage. He interprets with fidelity and fervour which bring them home hearers. This oratorio ought to be in choral societies and of church choirs."
